

ROBBED OF $130.

The Room of Two Young Men, from Gasconade County, Burglarized.

Two young men, giving their names as John Poppenhouse and George Conrad, arrived in the city last night and put up at "French Charles" boarding house near the corner Third and Engineer streets. Upon going to be in a small room up stairs, they locked the door, and undressing placed their vests under their pillows. Poppenhouse's pocket contained $50 in gold and $80 in greenbacks. While they were asleep some one gained entrance to the room, probably from the rear way, stole the $130, and got away. When Poppenhouse awoke and begun to dress, he discovered his loss. Conrad's clothes were not disturbed. The young men at once made complaint to the proprietor and also notified the police, but up to this afternoon had found no trace of the burglar.

The man who was supposed to be near Owensville, Gasconade county, Mo. For the past eight months he had been working on a farm near Berlin, Nebraska. By close economy he had saved up the considerable sum mentioned, and the loss is a very severe one to him. His friend Conrad is also from Gasconade. Both seem to be honest, sober, reliable young fellows.

The Confederate Home.

The Kansas City Star says: Some magnificent offers have been made for the confederate home. One of these is from Pettis county, which offers to purchase and give the entire town of Dresden, on the Missouri Pacific railway, nearly eight miles east of Kansas City, and also 100 acres of land. Dresden is a small village, but there are at least twenty good serviceable houses in it that could be utilized by the home organization. The people of Pettis also made another offer, and that is to purchase and give McAllister Springs and 160 acres of land if the executive committee would prefer McAllister Springs to Dresden. McAllister Springs is a health resort near Sweet Springs. It is visited annually by Kansas Cityans.

A Big Land Deal.

The Kansas & Texas Coal Company of St. Louis has purchased over eleven thousand acres of coal lands in Macon county, Mo., from the Thomas Wardell estate. The land lies in the coal fields at present operated by the Kansas & Texas Coal Co., near Ardmore, and gives this corporation a total acreage in that section of between 25,000 and 30,000 acres of coal lands, extending from Ardmore to Beaver on the Burlington road. Part of the Wardell tract has been operated and it was at these mines that the big strike occurred a few years ago when Wardell was shot by a miner and the State militia was called out. The Kansas & Texas Coal Co., is one of the biggest corporations of the kind in the United States and now owns almost 100,000 acres of coal lands in Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Indian Territory.

TUTTLE TALKS.

The Next Speaker in a Fine Humor and His Prospects Splendid.

Hon. W. F. Tuttle, the next speaker of the Missouri house of representatives, was in from his country place to-day. There is, now, no doubt of Col. Tuttle's election to the speakership, as he has received sufficient pledges from members from all sections of the state to guarantee his election beyond a doubt. At this, Pettis county will sincerely rejoice, as Col. Tuttle is one of her favorite and most favored sons.

Col. Tuttle, in conversation with a BAZOO representative to-day, proudly informed him of an addition to the Tuttle family, which came in the shape of a fine healthy democratic boy, at 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning, Dec. 1. Mother, child and father are doing well.

It is almost exactly two years ago that there was then another addition to the Tuttle family, in the shape of a fine democratic boy, who to-day proudly bears the grand name, David Francis Tuttle. The BAZOO suggests that his junior brother, just ushered into the world, be named Grover Cleveland Tuttle.

Cleveland and Francis are a strong team.

Col. Tuttle is doing most excellent work for the democratic party and deserves richly recognition at the hands of the party.

The little midget born on "Tiger Hill" at Carthage a few days ago and spoken of in this paper, died Saturday morning. Owing to suspicious actions of men who had tried to buy the child, the parents decided not to bury it at once. The undertaker pronounces it a well formed, healthy child, and those who saw it, were surprised to find it so perfect in appearance.

Agnes Herndon Wants a Divorce.

The following dispatch from New York will be read with interest here as Mr. and Mrs. Jessel were former residents of this city:

"There is trouble in the Jessel family. Mrs. Agnes H. Jessel, whose stage name is Agnes H. Herndon, wants a divorce from her husband, James A. Jessel. Application was made Friday to Judge Freedman in the superior court, for the appointment of a referee to hear and determine the point at issue between the parties. Judge Freedman has ordered a referee, but the referee's name had not been made known yet. Miss Herndon brings the suit on statutory grounds. Mr. Jessel denies the charge made by his wife. James H. Egan, of No. 280 Broadway, is Miss Herndon's lawyer, but while he says he is confident that Miss Herndon will secure her divorce without trouble, he is noncommunicative on nearly all points relating to the case."

It has always been believed by the friends of the actress that her husband was a detriment to her and it is quite possible, should she succeed in getting rid of him she may yet secure the fame, which she has worked so hard for without success. Miss Herndon is a very beautiful woman and is said to possess a character above reproach.

This seemed both to surprise and please the old man. After a brief chat, the Sands left the jail and took the train for the east.

BAFFLED THE MOB.

Bill Price, the Would be Negro Ravisher Has a Close Call.

The attempt of the negro, Bill Price, to ravish two young school girls near Sweet Springs, a few days ago, was fully related in the BAZOO. Saturday's Marshall Progress contains another chapter in the case;

"About ten o'clock on the evening of Friday, November 28 h, in the silvery moonlight of one of the prettiest nights that ever succeeded a beautiful day, a mob appeared at the side gate of the Saline county jail. There were about fourteen of them on horses and in conveyances. The rest of the mob were waiting in the edge of town. They were from Sweet Springs and wanted Bill Price, the negro who attempted to outrage Alice Minns. Four of them entered the side gate and came to the side door. The leader knocked at the door and said: "We demand the prisoner." Capt. Elliott opened the door, admitted the man and told him how the case stood. The room was dark but the man knew that the sheriff had assistance. Capt. Elliott told him his visit was of no use. That he had been forewarned of the whole scheme. That he was prepared for the emergency and that they could not get the prisoner. The prisoner was locked up and he had taken full precautions for defense and that they had better go home. Convinced that the captain spoke the truth the man turned around and left without a word. He and the other three at the door joined their companions and they moved quietly off. Captain Elliott had heard they were coming and that the plan was to pretend they were bringing a prisoner to jail and when he came out to receive the prisoner, to seize him and take the keys. He had with him in the room, in the dark where the leader of the mob was there, Marshall Charles Miller, Constable James Flynn and Deputy Sheriff John Perkins, all armed to the teeth and ready for action at the crook of a finger. Capt. Elliott thinks the mob was composed of good citizens exasperated at the horrible crime of the brute now under the protection of the law until his trial shall take place. He thinks that finding there would be blood shed and that he had the drop on them, they quietly accepted the situation. The city was as light as day, but the mob entered so noiselessly that only a few in town caught on. Sam Bacharach, A. J. Trigg, U. A. McBride and others stood off and watched the proceedings but their only intimation that something was up, was that they saw Captain Elliott hurrying around town to drum up the officers just before the mob arrived. It is also said that some of the mob were here all day yesterday and that their intention leaked out long before the shades of evening fell.

THE DEAD CAME TO LIFE,

And Thereby Saved the Neck of a Suspected Murderer From the Noose.

Some intensely interesting criminal law cases have been related to a representative of the Omaha Bee during the past week.

Judge Baldwin, with a career of more than forty years at the bar, proved to be one of the most valuable contributors.

"One of the most remarkable cases that has ever come to my notice," said Judge Baldwin, "was that of the two Boorns, who were convicted years ago in the Supreme Court of Vermont, in Bennington County, of the murder of Russell Colvin. It appears that Colvin, who was a brother-in-law of the prisoners, was a person of weak mind, and was considered burdensome to the family of the prisoners, who were obliged to support him; that at the time of his disappearance, he was in a distant area where the prisoners were at work; that a violent quarrel had broken out between them, and that one of them had struck him a severe blow on the back of the head with a club, which felled him to the ground. Some suspicions arose at the time that he was murdered, and these suspicions were increased by the finding of his hat in the same field a few months afterwards. These suspicions in process of time sub-sided, but later, one of the neighbors having repeatedly dreamed of the murder with great minuteness of circumstance, both in regard to the missing man's death and the concealment of his remains, the Boorns were vehemently accused and generally believed guilty of the murder. After a close search, the pocket-knife of Colvin and a button of his clothes were found in an old open cellar in the same field in which he had last been seen, and in a hollow stump not many rods from it were discovered two nails and a number of bones believed to be those of a man.

"Just prior to their trial friends of the Boorns far about them said that the evidence against them was too unmistakably plain for them to longer hold out and urged them to make a clean breast of the entire matter, holding that if they did so they would undoubtedly get their sentence of death—which was sure to be the result of their trial—commuted to imprisonment for life.

"The men were tried and sentenced to be hanged. Their friends renewed their request that they make a full confession. One of them finally complied with the request, detailing a long story of just how the murder had been committed. The other confessed but with great reluctance and doggedness, and would not go into details. "The one who had made the full confession had the sentence of death commuted, while the sentence of the penalty of the law was ordered carried out in the case of the other.

"As the day of execution approached, the doomed man made a declaration that he and his brother had lied—lied outrageously—and that for his part he would not risk facing his Maker with so awful a lie upon his soul. The declaration was received simply as an act of supreme cowardice in the face of death, and caused all but two or three of the most intimate friends of the maker of it to turn against him, so plain—to their minds and to the mind of the entire community—was that both men were guilty beyond all possible doubt.

"The last sunrise but one for the doomed man was just flooding his Vermont home when who should appear at the door but Russell Colvin—the man for the murder of whom Boorn was upon the morrow to be executed.

"The explanation of the whole matter," added Judge Baldwin, "is simple in its character. "The two Boorns had jumped upon Colvin in the field and beaten him. He had escaped from them, leaving his hat behind, and so overpowered was he with fear that he continued his flight until he found himself in New Jersey. At the last moment he had learned that one of his persecutors was about to be hanged as his murderer, and although he had suffered great brutality at his hands, Colvin immediately hastened back to save the unlucky fellow's neck. As for the confessions which the Boorns made, particularly the full and very explicit one, they were made for one purpose—that of saving their necks.

"While addressing the jury in a criminal case a few years ago," continued the judge, "I found myself at a loss for a suitable story with which to illustrate the great and supreme need existing for calm judgment and a complete investigation, particularly when human life is at stake, and so I manufactured this one.

"A passenger train was pulling into the station of a little New England town. The engineer had seen many years of continuous service on that particular run and was known and honored as a reliable man, and it was known to an inch where he would stop his engine on reaching the town. "A great celebration was held in the town one day, and when the train came in the track for fifty feet ahead of the point where the old-time engineer had always stopped his train was crowded with men, women and children so great a confidence did the all have in the power and rule of the old engineer to always stop his engine at one particular spot.

"But on this fatal day, when the train came in—horror of all horrors! Instead of stopping at the usual spot it ploughed on through the dense mass of humanity, grinding the life out of a score of human beings, and stopping only when its wheels had found no more of human blood to drink.

"Curse deep and black as woe ever uttered were rained down upon the engineer. Then came cries of 'Lynch him! Lynch him!'

"A rope was procured but before it could be wound about his neck some of the cooler heads in the mad dened mob counseled less haste—vised that the 'fiend of an engineer' be given a moment or two to explain. "With his face as white as a specter the engineer stepped to the platform of his cab, and looked the turbulent sea of infuriated humanity full in the face. But he was speechless.

"Enough," hissed the crowd. "His crime has stricken him dumb! Put the rope about his neck—the blood nster!"

"Never! For God's sake, never! shouted the fireman, whose trained eyes had been eagerly scanning the more important mechanism of the locomotive.

"Here!" he continued, holding aloft a little broken bolt not an inch and a half in length. "Here is the cause of the accident—a broken bolt at the throttle!"

"And so it proved to be, when those who had counseled discretion the wreaking of vengeance upon the engineer had made an examination.

"I believe," concluded the Judge "that I won one of the greatest cases of my life on that little bit of fiction and what do you think! After could adjourned, a fine-appearing, graying old gentleman came forward and grasping my hand, exclaimed: "You told the story well, Judge, you told it well. I was right in the crowd at the time of the accident and saw the whole thing!"
